Kung was a hidden wave from Taiwan, having only started her journey in high jewelry design at the age of 48. Her work first appeared at international auctions in the 90s and was widely applauded. Though a jewelry aficionada herself, she has never studied jewelry making nor design. Drawing from years of meditation and her fruitful life experience, Kung's work radiates personality and individuality.

The combination of Kung's masterful technique in utilizing neat lines and ingenious design, breathed new life to jadeites and coloured stones. Kung Tsung Tzu believes in handcrafting each piece of work herself. Hence, only a limited number of pieces are released every year and are very much sought after by collectors around the world.

While the large, glittering multicolored semi-transparent opal was reminiscent of Cinderella's glass shoes, the scintillation of this magnificent stone reminded Stewart of the pumpkin that became Cinderella's glass carriage. Stewart Young's new fairy tale collections are mostly inspired by Disney cartoons, many of which consist of animal characters and whimsical objects from the various stories. This brooch retains many details from the cartoon such as a mouse holding ruby-set ribbons and an oscillating high heel at the back. The piece is further enhanced with an ornate window frame showing a hazy effect at the front of the cabochon opal. The wearer of this brooch will undoubtedly be the Belle of the Ball, as this masterpiece is truly a wonderful piece of jewelry you cannot find elsewhere.

Fancy colour diamonds come in an array of colours. Each diamond possessing a unique composition of chemical elements that have the power to dictate rarity, value and desirability. In diamonds, rarity and desirability often relates to value. Therefore, diamonds with a noticeable hint of any colour on the coloured diamond spectrum are deemed considerably rarer.

Lot 580 is referred to, in the diamond trade, as a Chartreuse diamond. The name Chartreuse diamond can be applied to greenish-yellow, green-yellow, or occasionally yellow-green hues that exhibit light or strong tones. Referencing a similarity to the liquor originally distilled from a secret formula by the monks of La Grande Chartreuse, France, the presence of a strong “chartreuse” fluorescence of green, further enhances the hue and saturation of the diamond.

In the case of yellow diamonds, the presence of nitrogen is incorporated into their carbon crystal structure. The nitrogen impurities give a diamond its yellow colour as they modify light and absorb the blue part of the visible spectrum.

All fancy colour diamonds follow the same colour grading scale: Fancy Light, Fancy, Fancy Intense, and Fancy Vivid. As the colour concentration increases within the stone, so does its value. Lot 580 possesses a strong saturation, afforded the second highest colour grading of Fancy Intense Greenish Yellow. Coupled with its unique natural Chartreuse colour with strong green fluorescence, creates a unique opportunity to own a rare collectible created by nature.

Purple diamonds, like red diamonds, are one of the rarest hues in the world of natural colour diamonds. The color of a diamond is created by chemical impurities or structural irregularities within the crystal lattice during formation. In the case of natural purple diamonds, as specimens are so rare – it is theorized that the combination of boron and hydrogen plays a part in creating the unique colour.

Whilst most purple stones contain secondary hues of pink, red, blue, or gray. It is important to note that the dominant colour is the last colour mentioned in the colour description, in Lot 587's example of Fancy Pink Purple, with purple being the dominant colour.

Due to its rarity, few noteworthy purple diamonds have been known in the market. In particular, the Royal Purple Heart is a 7.34 carat Fancy Vivid Purple diamond and is currently the largest Fancy Vivid Purple diamond known to exist. The Purple Orchid, introduced in Hong Kong in 2014, was a 3.37 carat, Fancy Intense Pink Purple masterpiece.

Lot 587 is a remarkable 5.06 carats, coupled with extraordinary natural colour composition, making it a rare collectible for diamond aficionados.

Cartier, founded in 1847, has created a reputation synonymous with the fusion of exceptional savoir-faire and timelessness. Celebrated as the “Jeweller of the Kings”, Cartier continuously pushes the boundaries, striving to achieve excellence in originality beyond one’s imagination.

Embracing Cartier’s historical journey with its luxurious approach, the fundamental belief remains that the gemstones guide each creation. Even the most discerning jewellery collectors turn to Cartier to create exceptional jewels. Craftsmen and designers work seamlessly together to showcase the inherent beauty of each gem, through design and the use of precious metals, encapsulating the essence of the Cartier vision.

Lot 592, designed as a pair of diamond fluted scrolls, set with brilliant and baguette-cut diamonds, to the diamond framed emerald pendent earrings, is reflective of Cartier’s multi-dimensional design aesthetic. The elegant design highlights a matched pair of Colombian emeralds, set with minimal metal settings, emphasizing the play of light to radiate the beauty and transparency of the gemstones.

Lot 593, a 9.89 carat, Colombian emerald, is set in a classic diamond setting, using a surround of marquise cut diamonds. Each diamond is deliberately set at different angles to create light that refracts off each diamond enhancing the exquisite emerald.

Both jewels are testament to Cartier’s distinctive understanding of individual gemstones, expressing each unique personality.

Letšeng Mine

Lot 596, an impressive 20.27carat, D colour, Flawless clarity, Type IIA diamond, showcases the convergence of natural elements to create the perfect example, sourced from the legendary Letšeng mine, fulfills the top criterion of an exceptional diamond.

Letšeng Mine

Diamond rarity depends on a combination of factors, with subtle differences in colour and clarity dramatically affecting a diamond's value. Four important factors to describe and classify diamonds are: Colour, Clarity, Cut and Carat Weight. Described as the 4Cs, together they describe the quality of a finished diamond.

Letšeng Mine

Colour of a diamond can dramatically affect diamond value. When graded at the GIA laboratory, diamonds are colour graded under controlled conditions by comparing them to diamonds of known colour, called masterstones.

Letšeng Mine

D colour, is the highest colourless diamond grade. Considered by far the rarest and most desirable of the colourless diamond spectrum, D colour diamonds account for a small percentage of all diamonds sold worldwide.

Letšeng Mine

Clarity, in a diamond, is relative to the presence or absence of inclusions and blemishes. As a natural creation, diamonds generally have natural internal features, called inclusions, as well as surface irregularities, known as blemishes.

Letšeng Mine

Clarity characteristics are often indicative of a gem created under natural occurrences, which can impact positively or negatively on a diamond's value. Flawless, is the top grade in the GIA diamond clarity grading system, where a natural diamond under magnification is devoid of visible inclusion or blemishes. It is estimated that Flawless and Internally Flawless diamonds represent less than 0.5% of all natural diamonds mined.

Type IIA, is a rare subgroup of diamonds, that comprises less than 2% of all gem-quality diamonds. Diamonds in this group are the most chemically pure type of diamond and often possess exceptional optical transparency.

Letšeng Mine, located in the Maluti Mountains of Lesotho, is renowned for its recovery of large, high quality, exceptional diamonds. One of the world's highest diamond mine at 3,100 meters above sea level, it has the highest dollar value-per-carat of any diamond mine. Legendary diamonds recovered from the mine include the 550carat "Letšeng Star" and the 493carat "Letšeng Legacy".
